

The Story of Our Home

This is the place where the Abrahams live.
This is the space they have chosen to give
all the makings and the labor of a home.
It is the very definition of a home.

Dad built the wall with his great leather hands.
Project by project, a house rose from his land.
He sunk posts, shouldered beams, laid brick, joined seams,
His passion and vision built a house fit for kings.

Mom laid the nest with its own kind of flair.
She put chickens in the kitchen; breathed love in the air.
Splashes of color! Red, green, blue, and bright!
More purple! More beavers! More trinkets to delight!

Son spent late nights ushering in certain noise
of the cackling and hollers that suit battling boys.
This house played a bastion for the kind and confused who sought social outlets but had no taste for booze.

The happiest inhabitants may well be the dogs.
With a whimper or butt wag, they can cure any fog.
They sit on the couches and sleep in the beds;
They make any walk easier, and joy widespread.

This place is a stage for great social affairs.
It is the center of a community: home of a Mayor.
Even the President has signed one of these walls.
Coaches, celebrities, and cyclists all walk these halls.

It is a studio for photography and a museum for art;
A playground for canines, holds a veritable Wal Mart.
It sees pool parties, pizza parties, late afternoon snacks.
It holds tools, toys, fishes, horses, and geese "tracks."

This is the place where the Abrahams live.
This is the space they have chosen to give
all the makings and the labor of a home.
It is the very definition of a home.
